A GOVERNMENT HOME FOR SEAMEN.

Its Feasibility-History and Description of the Seamon's Home in Calcutta, East

Indies. TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:-

It has long been a matter of deep concern and solicitude on the part of those interested in the welfare of seamen generally, not only as to the best means to be employed by which their morale may be improved, but also, if in possession of those means, what steps, initiatory in their character, would seem to be most necessary to take to bring out this happy result, and thus place them as a class in a position so as to be, to a measure, secure against the degrading and permicious influence with which they are continually surrounded while on shore. That the present system, or, rather, want of system, prevailing on shore and having for its purpose the accommodation and protection of seamen, is not at all calculated to promote these ends, but on the contrary, as experience has shown, to be subversive of them, are facts which it were folly to question. Seamen, then, have no home. . They want a home to begin with—a nome protective in its character, domestic in its retirement, and around which will revolve and cluster infinences of such a nature for good as will endear it to them. It were idee to refer to what seamen's boarding houses as at resent constituted, and to tell us that they are the embodiment of all these requirements for the care, comfort and protection of seamen. Those who are able to speak from experience, and they are legion, know to the contrary. They know, ah! but too well, by sad and painful experience, what they have from time to time endured and suffered through and by reason of them, or rather through and by reason of their heartless and mercenary keepers, and they deem it not unfair to predict that he time is not far distant when, should they still be allowed to exist as now, they will be shunned by all well-thinking scamen. But we will assume for argument sake what is not the fact, that the reverse of this picture be true, and that the seamen's boarding houses as at present constituted and conducted are everything that can most be desired so far as enevolence, order, decorum and all the other lesser virtues are concerned, and then the shades of a Webster or a Walker would, if pos sible for them to do so, arise from their graves if for no other purpose than to expunge from the vocab-ulary of the English language this play upon words. And this now brings me to the important ques-

Will not the government take this matter in hand and establish an institution of the character named above for the protection and advancement of the interests of its seamen? The feasibility of such a project or undertaking under our government can scarcely admit of question or reasonable doubt, more especially when we come to consider that, apart from the fact that it will be a good paying investment pecuniarily, it will also have the effect to place under the control of the government a very large percentage of the seamen in our large cities. Such an institution has been long regarded as a great public necessity by very many who have proved themselves capable of reflecting seriously and ably upon our national wants, and it is to them, as to others, a matter of much surprise that the government has not as yet moved in the matter. As illustrative of my own views upon this subject, I will say that it is proposed now as an act of ares aaring the present session of Congress for the erection in the city of New York, in a location consensitive the common of the commo of this country, that makes the government through it to the marine interests, the government and its seamen?

There are other suggestions in connection with the establishment of a government home for seamen in this country which being of equal importance with what has already been said concerning the Calcutta Home, might irecty be offered, only that I am almost atraid of trespassing upon your valuable epace, buffee it to say that, until such time as the representatives of our government become satisfied of the great importance of this measure, that efforts be made by them for the establishment of government shipping office, which might

Patrick Malligan Carries Off a $150 Roos-

Pairick Melligan, who lives at No. 69 Roosevelt street, has a great passion for game cocks and fancy canary birds, and to obtain a first class specimen of either he has been known, upon several occasions, to resort to somewhat questionable means. Eugene Hale keeps a place at 200 Fulton street, where he sells the very articles for which Malligan has such a fondness. Yesterday morning Mailigan was passing down Fulton street, and seeing a lot of coops and cages sitting at Hale's door, walked in and inquired as to whether or not the proprietor was at that time the custodian of any really fine A No. 1 canary birds. He was in quest of one which he wished to present to his sweetheart, and for which he was willing to pay a good round sum, provided it was as good as the ever get to be. Mr. Hale assured him that he had the very bird he wanted, to provo which he showed him a large number, any one of which he onered to guarantee to be line singers. The price asked by Mr. Hate was $3.50, which recemed to please Patrick greatly, for without further ceromony he produced a plethoric pocketocok, from which he took the required sum and handed to Mr. Hate.

which he took the required any good game birds, Mr.
Hate? inquired Patrick.
Alt. Hate had, and he showed him half a dozen.
Pat's eye lit on one—a large, fine looking black red cook—and he at once began bantering the owner about the price.

nt. Hade lad, and he showed him half a dozenpat's eye lit on one—a large, the looking black red cock—and he at once began bantering the owner about the price.

"I hat bird I don't care about selling." said Hale, "unless I get my price, which is no loss than $150." Such an enormous sum singgered Mr. Malli, ran somewhat; but, nevertheless, he said he would give it. He would be in again in the alternoon.

At this juncture a customer came in; and, while Hale's attention was called away for a few minnies, Mr. Patrick Malligan picked up the $1.00 bird, and made tracks up Fulton street towards Broadway, taking good care as he went to hide the fowl under a large Spanish cloak which he wore. Hale soon missed the bird, and, giving chase, came up with the thief at the corace of Vesey street and Broadway, where he collared him and heid him secure until an officer came to his assistance. Malligan and the rooster were both taken to the Potice Court, where the Judge, after hearing the case, secuded to lock the thief up and to return to Mr. Hale his property. Subsequently, upon examining the money which Malligan had paid him for the canary bird, Hale found it to be counteriett.
